Dear Dr Winarso,

We have received the feedback of reviewers R2611 and R2612.

Reviewer R2612 has confirmed your revisions.

But reviewer R2611 has objected the corrections which given.

Here are the objections by R2611:

"I checked the revised manuscript. But unfortunately, the revised manuscript has not addressed the most critical issue I had pointed out.

But unfortunately, the paper does not illustrate details on implementation of the problem-posing lesson. Potential readers would not gain any benefits without precise explanations about the background and design of instructions, materials, and learning activities given to students. It must precisely describe information in the empirical study such as participants and their background, what they were asked and how they did that in the contextual learning treatment and traditional learning, as well as the problem-posing lesson. It must also describe data collected and procedures in data analysis concretely. Since such information is absent, basic statistics shown in some of the tables would not help readers understand things that happened in the study. These facts prevented the reviewer from properly understanding and evaluating the paper.

It enhanced descriptions about the background in adapting problem-posing to their lessons. Although it also added a table indicating implementation of the lessons, information in the table is abstract and helpless. To be accepted, it must show detailed information of the lessons such as instructions, materials, and learning activities given to students, data collected and procedures in data analysis more precisely. I cannot still comprehend whether the implementation was consistent with the background and the results met with the purpose."

Please do all of these corrections and resend the revised paper to us.

If you have any objections, please explain the reason in the correction report. If you can't complete all of the corrections, we can't continue the editorial process of your manuscript. The deadline for submission of the revised paper is 24th April 2020.

We are looking forward to your revised paper.
